UK Outlook for Friday 20 Aug 2021 to Sunday 29 Aug 2021:
Often rather cloudy at times through next week with cloud thick enough for outbreaks of rain at times, especially towards the northwest of the UK. Elsewhere, largely dry with some sunny spells although rather breezy and cool. Towards the end of next week settled conditions are likely to become more dominant across most areas with plenty of dry weather. However there still remains the possibility of showers, with perhaps some longer spells of rain and stronger winds in the north. Temperatures are expected to be around average. During late August, similar conditions look likely but there is a greater chance of winds from a southerly sector allowing for the possibility of some very warm spells. This may also bring the chance of intermittent heavy rain and thundery showers.
